

Seahorse

It has a head like a horse and a tail like a monkey, but the seahorse is really a fish. It has fins, and it uses gills, like other fish, to breath. Water is taken in and passes through the gills which filter the oxygen from the water. The seahorse has armored plates instead of scales and, unlike other fish, it swims in an upright position.